

Guide to a Conscious Fractal Plasma Universe

What is Spirituality?

Spirituality is traditionally thought of as the belief that there are unseen or unknown forces that impact us as human beings. In the modern era, we already know we are surrounded by invisible energies like radio waves, electrical signals, and magnetic effects.

Electrical Plasma Torus

An electrified and self-sustaining vortex of energy that is composed of Plasma, charged ions contained in the geometric structure we call a torus.

A Torus has a center point where all energy is drawn toward.

Plasma can be compressed to scales near or beyond the smallest known length in the universe: the Planck Length.

All energy within a torus circles its central point and converges there cyclically, ultimately imploding at the center.

We Are All Fractals

Fractals are self-repeating patterns in which each part is similar to the whole. Every fractal contains its own series of repeating, self-similar structures, recursively extending inward or outward.

Since plasma makes up 99.9% of the known universe, it suggests that the torus, the common structure found in plasma formations, may be the universe's fundamental fractal shape.

Plasma Toruses are signs of consciousness & intelligence

A self-sustaining Plasma Torus acts in response to its environment. These are key criteria we use to determine consciousness and intelligence.

Since a Plasma torus is only able to maintain itself with an intact central core, any change to the structure impacts the core of the plasma torus. Anything that effects its energy, affects its internal stability.

To preserve its individuated coherence, the torus must adapt. This ability to adjust and self-regulate in response to external conditions. By definition, this is intelligence and conscious interaction.

Coherent Plasma can be invisible

Depending on how much energy is moving through plasma, it can be in two different visible states, 'dark' and 'glow' modes. These modes behave just as they sound. In glow mode, plasma emits visible light. In dark mode, it remains invisible to the human eye.

It takes a large amount of energy running through a medium for plasma to enter glow mode, for this reason, it's believed that most plasma in the universe is actually in dark mode.

Plasma Toruses Can Exist Within & Without Us

A feature of the torus is the ability to co-exist within one another in a symbiotic manner. These systems can even begin to work together to create even more robust systems or entities.

Much like how on our bodies we have energetic vortexes (chakras) that co-create the structure that is our body, galaxies, solar systems, and planets do the same.

Merging with the ancient mystery teachings

Ancient stories of gnomes, fairies, elves, and elemental spirits have been around as long as humanity has been. It was only in the recent centuries that modern thinking dismissed anything in the world that we could not physically interact with. However, as we discussed, we know this is far from true.

Is it possible that the so-called nature folk are actually energetic forms that naturally arise from the planet?

Perhaps the old tales of little beings living near trees and hidden places should be taken more seriously.

Even more interestingly, if we extend this perspective into the realm of ghosts and spirits of the deceased, the implications become even more compelling. Could a ghost be a fragment of a once-living entity's energetic field, detached and lingering in the environment? This might explain why ghosts are often reported at sites of trauma, accidents, or foul play.

What we once called folklore may turn out to be a science we're only just beginning to remember.

I believe that with this, we have a good basis for beginning to understand what spiritual forces might be surrounding us. It may not be all that surrounds us, but it's a good place to start sorting this out in the modern era.
